Beauty blog: Snap to it

Filed under: Beauty blog — Vanessa @ 11:34 am

I recently made one of those “why didn’t anyone think of this earlier” types of beauty discoveries: a skin and hair care line that focuses on environmental conditions rather than assigned skin “types”.

Solavie Eco-Global Skin and Hair Care is a clever system of unisex body products that includes face washes, moisturizers, shower gels and hair shampoos and conditioners. The packaging is standout: you can snap two different products together (making them great for traveling and space saving), there’s no wasteful outer packaging, and the plastic is completely recyclable.

There are six climate specific systems to choose from: Mountains, Urban, Tropics, Shore, Plains or Desert. It’s pretty logical thinking: a family living in the hot, dry heat of the desert would likely be in need of more moisturizing ingredients, like the Yucca and Sage Oils in the Desert line. Urban mamas need to battle the daily onslaught of city grime and pollution, and thus, the Urban line is full of antioxidants like Vitamin’s A and E.

I’ve been using the Tropics line (even though the only thing even remotely tropical in my life right now is the umbrella in my evening cocktail), and I love the de-frizzing action of the Hair Nourish and Style conditioner. Prices range from $10 - $38.
